ABSTRACT
Rajasthan, a state with a thriving cultural scene in India, is home to a diverse range of traditional folk dance performances and folk music that have greatly influenced the growth of the local culture. Through thoroughly examining various folk dance and music, their historical roots, and their contemporary relevance, this study sheds light on how these folk dances and music contribute to preserving Rajasthan's legacy and their significance in fairs and festivals. The main goal of this study is to examine the mutually beneficial interaction between Rajasthan's traditional performances—such as folk dances and music, and the fairs and festivals that shape the state's calendar. The paper is exploratory, providing an overview of the folk dance and music of Rajasthan and their relevance to the state-wide fairs and festivals.

Keywords: folk dance, folk music, fairs, festivals

I. INTRODUCTION

Rajasthan's folk performances testify to its people's long-standing customs and display a peaceful synthesis of diverse civilizations and influences. The diverse artistic expressions include the alluring beats of traditional music like Manganiyar and Langas, the hypnotic dances of Kalbelia dance, and the heartfelt storytelling of Kalbelia dance. The state's history, myths, and values have been passed down through the centuries, and each form acts as a reservoir for them. These performers weave a captivating tapestry that carries viewers back in time with vivid colours, catchy music, and beautiful dancing.

In Rajasthan, fairs and festivals are more than just occasions for celebration; they are lavish extravaganzas that unite neighbors and showcase the state's cultural richness. Rajasthan's folk music and entertainment have a significant effect on these celebrations. For instance, during the Pushkar Camel Fair, the Kalbelia dancers and puppeteers bring life to the Rajasthan's deserts. At the same time, during the Teej festival, women's hands are decorated with complex Mehendi patterns in vivid hues. Similarly, the Manganiyar and Langas musicians fascinate listeners during the Rajasthan International Folk Festival (RIFF) with their ageless melodies, cutting over linguistic borders.

By preserving and promoting Rajasthan's rich legacy, these artistic expressions and performances also serve a deeper purpose. They preserve long-standing traditions in the face of modernization by giving artisans and artists a platform to demonstrate their talents. Additionally, these celebrations bring visitors worldwide, significantly impacting the state's economy and cross-cultural interaction.

In conclusion, Rajasthan's fairs and festivals are driven by the folk music and dance performances that make up the state. They link the past and present, bringing people together, protecting heritage, and mesmerizing viewers with their enduring beauty. Rajasthan will continue to be a vivid tapestry of colours, rhythms, and stories for years because of these cultural treasures, which continue to enthral and inspire.

II. LITERATURE REVIEW

Humans are creatures that seek meaning, create symbols and attribute meaning. They look for meaning, construct symbols, assign roles for their existence, and express themselves through the arts like music, dance, and theatre, whether they live in a literate or illiterate culture. Cultural anthropologists, folklorists, and ethnomusicologists frequently examine the functional relationship between art and culture today (Joseph, 2004). The art symbols, which concurrently represent, define, and manifest the associated referent, are regarded as fact in pre-literate society. These civilizations use artistic objects and live performances as media for storing and exchanging information. Art has numerous subcategories, including music, dance, drama, handicrafts, drawing, and painting (Joseph, 2004).

III. FOLK DANCE

A vast collection of unconnected non-classical dance styles, India's endless folk dances are distinguished by their spontaneity and the cultural relief they offer through their directness of expression, collective ageless wisdom, and profundity of vision (Angadi, 2018). Without a folk dance performance, an Indian house stay, a stay in a historic hotel, or a trip to a theme village like Chowki Dhani in Jaipur, Rajasthan, a tour is incomplete. The Kalbelia dance and the fire dance, which feature music performed by Manganiyar native musicians, are the main draws of Rajasthan's desert safaris (Angadi, 2018).

Rajasthan's folk performances are like the delicate threads of a grand tapestry which weave together its people's stories, beliefs, and aspirations, preserving the essence of a rich cultural heritage. Folk dances and people's daily lives have always complemented one another, leaving many marks on all historical figures (Sharma, 2011). So, Rajasthan's traditional artisans use brushes, strings, and sometimes their bodies to create works of art that bring the region's rich history and culture to life in bustling cities and dusty villages. The numerous kinds of Rajasthani folk art, such as music, dance, painting, and crafts, have been widely studied by academics like Kothari (1982). The writings of Kothari serve as a solid foundation for comprehending the richness of Rajasthan's cultural heritage.

III. FOLK MUSIC

India's folk music, or the people's music, contains the country's real beat. Like learning folk dances, folk music is accomplished through osmosis rather than formal training because rural life's economics restrict it. The musicians make the traditional instruments that accompany their music from materials like silk, peritoneum, bamboo, coconut shells, etc., that are readily available. In India, there is a song for every situation. It is similar to having a background music score for any scenario that could occur in life (Angadi, 2018). The river of ageless music also flows through the veins of Rajasthan. The Manganiyar and Langas' soul-stirring music tells stories of love, longing, and life while conjuring the spirits of desert landscapes.

Folk dance and music from Rajasthan are well-known around the world. Rajasthan's festivals are more than just one-time occasions; they are vivacious expressions of culture, religion, and community spirit. Marriage joy and the beginning of the monsoon are celebrated during the Teej festival, where ladies decorate themselves with beautiful henna designs inspired by miniature paintings. The Gangaur festival, which celebrates the goddess of marital bliss, Gauri, dazzles with processions, songs, and dances and brings the towns to life with its vivid colours. Folk art and festivals in Rajasthan are more than just examples of the culture; they are also the lifeblood of a vibrant nation. They leave a lasting legacy by bridging the gap between the past and present. These festivals frequently feature vibrant processions, exuberant folk music and dance performances, religious rites, and a stunning exhibition of costumes and jewellery from the local culture. Rajasthan's fairs and festivals honour the state's history and give local craftspeople a chance to display their talents and tourists to experience the warm hospitality and rich culture of this alluring state. These festivals provide performances and folk art, transporting participants and onlookers to a realm where the past and present coexist. Vibrant processions, local entertainment, and ceremonies related to religion distinguish Rajasthan's fairs and celebrations. Hence, various ethnographic studies shed light on the cultural significance of these events.

In conclusion, the rich tapestry of Rajasthan's folk music and dance performances plays an indispensable role in the region's vibrant tapestry of fairs and festivals. These cultural expressions serve not only as a source of entertainment but also as a means of preserving and transmitting centuries-old traditions and values. Therefore, this paper explores the role of music and dance in rituals, celebrations, and daily life.

VI. ELEMENTS OF FOLK DANCE AND FOLK MUSIC OF RAJASTHAN AND THEIR ROLE IN FAIRS AND FESTIVALS STATE-WIDE

Folk Dance Performances of Rajasthan

I. Ghoomar

Ghoomar's origins can be traced back to the royal courts of Rajasthan, particularly in the Marwar region. The name "Ghoomar" is derived from the Hindi word "Ghoomna," which means "to twirl". The ubiquitous Ghoomar, a premier Rajasthan's dance form, encapsulates the true spirit of the state’s vivacious culture. Born among the Bhils and nurtured by the Rajput womenfolk, Ghoomar is a dance performed on ceremonious occasions and festive days like the Holi, Gangaur, Teej celebrations, etc. The bride is asked to perform the Ghoomar in Rajput households as part of the nuptial festivities. The newlywed is soon joined by the household women, both old and young alike, and they dance into the wee hours of the night.

Role of Ghoomar in Fairs and Festivals of Rajasthan

The Rajasthan's folk dance known as Ghoomar plays a significant part in the region's fairs and festivals, bringing cultural life to the festivities. In celebrations like the Teej and Gangaur Festivals, it plays a crucial role in igniting excitement and devotion. Additionally, Ghoomar is used to show respect for gods like Goddess Saraswati at religious festivals, neighborhood fairs, and wedding celebrations. Its ongoing participation in these celebrations is essential for maintaining this historical dance, ensuring its transfer to subsequent generations, and defending Rajasthan's cultural heritage. Beyond its cultural importance, Ghoomar has attracted visitors from all over the world who excitedly take part in or watch its performances during Rajasthan's fairs and festivals.

Essentially, Ghoomar acts as a cultural bridge connecting Rajasthan's past with its present and welcomes everyone to the celebration. Its enduring popularity at fairs and festivals speaks to its timeless appeal and role in making Rajasthan's cultural heritage come alive for locals and visitors alike.

II. Bhavai Dance

Bhavai dance has ancient origins and is believed to have been performed for centuries in Rajasthan. It was initially associated with the Bhavai folk theatre, a popular entertainment form in Rajasthan. Bhavai performances often featured acrobatic movements and storytelling through dance.

One of Rajasthan's most dramatic and tense dances is the traditional folk dance known as Bhavai. It is an art form that involves gyrating and dancing while maintaining a delicate balance and piling various objects on one's head. The tribes and clans that support this art include the Jats, Bhils, Raigars, Meenas, Charmars, and Kumhars.

Due to their work in the desert regions, the women of these tribes are accustomed to such precise balancing. The Rajasthani women who carry water from the wells/oases to their homes can carry several of these urns and pots across a distance in this way. Bhavai is thought to have its roots in the nearby state of Gujarat.

Role of Bhavai Dance in Fairs and Festivals of Rajasthan

Bhavai dance is an exciting and integral part of the fairs and festivals of Rajasthan. This traditional folk dance form adds a unique blend of entertainment, culture and social commentary to the vibrant celebrations of Rajasthan. The below points define the role of Bhavai dance in the fairs and festivals of Rajasthan:

Rajasthan's fairs and festivals celebrate the state's rich cultural legacy and are complete with the mesmerizing and essential Bhavai dance. Navratri, Teej Festival, and several folk festivals, such as the Rajasthan International Folk Festival (RIFF) and Desert Festival, all feature this dynamic art style. Bhavai dance gives festivities life by combining talent and balance in a certain way. Additionally, it can be a significant component in religious processions, particularly those that worship deities and goddesses. Bhavai dance is a dynamic expression of culture, art, and social commentary within the setting of contemporary festivities, serving as a living monument to Rajasthan's ongoing folk art legacy beyond its significance as entertainment.
III. Kalbelia Dance

A traditional dance from the Indian state of Rajasthan is the kalbelia. Other titles for it include "Sapera Dance" and "Snake Charmer Dance." 'Kalbelia' is the name of a tribe in Rajasthan that is known for performing the Kalbelia dance. The dance is accompanied by the traditional music of Rajasthan, including the Pungi (a wind instrument) and Dholak (a drum). The music adds depth and energy to the performance. The Kalbelia dance and songs from Rajasthan are now included on UNESCO's designated list of the Intangible Cultural Assets of Humanity as of 2010 due to the dance's immense popularity worldwide. In Kalbelia dance, males play various traditional instruments, and females dance.

Role of Kalbelia Dance in Fairs and Festivals of Rajasthan

The Kalbelia dance, also known as the "Snake Charmer's Dance," plays a distinctive and mesmerizing part in fairs and celebrations in Rajasthan. While Holi, the festival of colours, features special Kalbelia traditional dances, Kalbelia songs use stories to spread mythical knowledge. During festivals, Kalbelia dance troupes frequently direct or participate in vibrant processions that animate the ambience. For onlookers, these processions are a visual treat. The beautiful Kalbelia dance performed at Rajasthan's fairs and festivals celebrates art, culture, and environment. It offers viewers a glimpse into Rajasthan's rich and varied cultural fabric while showcasing the tenacity and inventiveness of the Kalbelia people.

Folk music of Rajasthan

I. Manganiyar and Langas

The Manganiyar community is renowned for its extraordinary musical talent, particularly in vocal and instrumental performances. The adaptability of Langas and Manganiyar is well known. They perform music in various genres, such as folk songs, religious songs, Sufi Qawwals, and classical pieces. The Langas are another significant musical community in Rajasthan, with a musical legacy profoundly ingrained in their history and culture. The Langas and Manganiyar are generational musicians, and their music has been an essential element of Rajasthan's cultural environment for generations.

Role of Manganiyar and Langas in Fairs and Festivals of Rajasthan

The state's fairs and festivals benefit from the contributions of the Manganiyar and Langa musicians, two well-known folk communities in Rajasthan, who enhance the celebrations' rich cultural tapestry. Their traditional folk music and deep songs are an entrancing soundtrack during occasions like the Pushkar Camel Fair and the Desert Festival in Jaisalmer, where they are prominently featured. By employing their music to evoke spiritual connections, these musicians add to the joyous atmosphere of events like Diwali and numerous religious festivals. Their performances offer a genuine and musical depth to the vivid celebrations of the area while also playing a crucial role in protecting and promoting Rajasthan's rich traditional music heritage.

II. Maand Folk Music

Maand music has its roots in Rajasthan's royal courts, especially during the time of the Rajput kingdoms. This type of music had an essential role in courtly culture, serving as entertainment and displaying the opulence of the Rajput kings. Its origins can be traced back to North Indian classical music, particularly the Hindustani classical style. The unusual melodies, catchy lyrics, and usage of particular musical scales, or "Maand," make this music stand out. Rajasthan's rich cultural legacy includes Maand music, which has a long history.

Role of Maand in Fairs and Festivals

Maand, a traditional folk song and dance genre, is a big part of Rajasthan's fairs and festivals, adding to their rich cultural tapestry. Various seasonal events, such as the Gangaur and Teej Festivals, Diwali, Holi, the Pushkar Camel Fair, the Desert Festival in Jaisalmer, and folk music festivals like RIFF, feature its performance. These meetings take on a lively and festive quality thanks to Maand's rhythmic and melodic expressions, which also introduce guests to Rajasthan's rich cultural legacy and artistic skill. Maand music is crucial to Rajasthan's traditional celebrations since it adds to the overall celebratory atmosphere, whether in processions, cultural events, or community gatherings.

III. Bhopa-Bhopi Music

Music from the Bhopa and Bhopi cultures has been passed down orally from one generation to the next. It is ingrained in the oral history of the Kalbelia people and is used to tell legends, myths, and stories.

Bhopa-Bhopi music is a particular and ancient way of telling stories through music and narrative in Rajasthan, India. Storytellers are classified as Bhopas or Bhopis, depending on gender. They are members of specific organizations tasked with performing to convey myths, folklore, and historical tales.

Role of Bhopa and Bhopi Music in Fairs and Festivals

The Bhopa-Bhopi music of Rajasthan is strongly tied to the storytelling traditions of the Bhopa and Bhopi people, who use music, song, and visual art to narrate the tales of folk deities and heroes. It is a crucial component of numerous rituals and occasions, while not being as prevalent at popular fairs and festivals as specific other genres of folk music, especially during the Pabuji Ki Phad Festival, when grand painted scrolls accompany the legendary tales of the deity Pabuji as they are spoken. Additionally, Bhopa-Bhopi music occasionally takes part in cultural events to preserve and promote the state's traditional arts and culture and temple festivals honouring regional deities in rural Rajasthan. Bhopa-Bhopi music, in general, transmits the rich oral traditions of the area through its artistic representations, making it a distinctive and essential part of Rajasthan's cultural history.

VII. CONCLUSION

Folk dance performances and folk music place a significant cultural, economic, and social value on traditional art and entertainment of the state. The fascinating and vital element of the state's fairs and festivals is the folk performing culture of Rajasthan. More than just a source of entertainment, these fascinating examples of culture and tradition represent Rajasthan's cultural heritage. Artistic performances in the form of folk dance and folk music from Rajasthan act as the nation's storytellers, narrating tales of valour, love, and spirituality. These old traditions foster a strong sense of identity and belonging by bridging generations and connecting the past and present. The craftspeople, musicians, and entertainers are the torchbearers of centuries-old traditions that ensure the legacy remains. Rajasthan pays tribute to its cultural history and encourages the world to experience its wonders by presenting its residents' talents during fairs and festivals.

Folk performances are economic engines that draw visitors from all over the world in addition to being forms of culture. They provide a lively sense of Rajasthan's presence and a look into the past. The praise they receive on a global scale promotes tourism and helps countless families support their families, further enhancing the social fabric of Rajasthan.

Rajasthan's folk performances are vital to the state's fairs and celebrations, serving as more than just amusement. They use their magic to elevate festivities from the ordinary to the exceptional. They act as the ties that bind Rajasthan's numerous ethnic groups together to form a colourful and well-balanced tapestry. These traditions will always play a significant role in defining Rajasthan's character, safeguarding its history and bringing delight and astonishment to anybody fortunate enough to witness them.
